

I urge you to please uphold the current restrictions that NJ has put in place for its "Do not call list". Since the implementation of this act, it has been an absolute blessing in my household. Even though in the past few months we have noticed a slight increase in sales calls, it is still nothing compared to what it had been at one time which was relentless and at all hours of the day. The intrusive nature of the calls, inappropriate time of morning and night, the volume, the repeated calls by the same company, etc. are enough to make someone want to pull the phone out of the wall. Companies should adapt and find other ways to make a sale. It's called change and they'll have to think outside the box or fail. If businesses aren't clever enough to find an alternate method of soliciting business, they don't deserve to make a profit in my opinion! No sympathy from this marketing director with 10 plus years experience. Thank you.
